began after I was severely injured in a motorcycle accident. My back healed but I didn't regain movement in my legs. I went back to school and graduated, but now was unemployable because of my disability. I got a job with Maternal & Child Health and there was a shortage of nurses. I was overqualified, but my "handicap" was hindering my ability to perform my duties. My superiors and coworker told me that I should continue working, as I was making the rounds and had landed a position and then I got a job at this hospital. At my workplace, there were a lot of other nurses in similar situations and I started a study group with them to help them with their problems. Eventually I brought my study group to my workplace and I had other colleagues ask me to start a study group at my new workplace. It's been going now for about 4 years and we have over 70 nurses in our group. About a year ago, I was assigned a new mentor. This woman who I call "Grandma" works in the NICU and is the head nurse on my unit. The first day of our "intervention" she came in and told me how she was going to be working with me to "change my attitude." I'd been doing really well, but she said that my attitude wasn't always positive. I could be a bit stiff and monotone with my observations, but not necessarily mean. I told her that I'm a bit of a dork and ask a lot of questions. She said that she'd be asking me questions to help me change my attitude, and also I'd be doing her mentorship reports. After a few weeks, she came in and asked me about my attitudes, and she kept my feedback on my reports. Over the next several weeks, she started telling me about her life. She's been in an abusive relationship since high school, and she's been addicted to alcohol, been married twice, and has had several miscarriages. I was shocked by her life. She also just "fucked" her husband and I heard about it on the job. She hasn't been in an "assigned" relationship since then and she's been off the booze for a year now. I'm shocked at how courageous and willing she was to "be open" 82157476af
